Beryllium copper scrap price per pound

(Bloomberg Opinion) - China's next step to opening up commodity markets could be a step change. As of Thursday, overseas investors will be able to trade copper futures on the Shanghai International Energy Exchange. This is not the first such product: The yuan-denominated crude oil contract, which was launched in March 2018, has been modestly successful. A subsequent effort by foreigners to trade iron ore in Dalian has created a global benchmark. Copper is outperforming these efforts, thanks to unexpected timing, a global appetite for economic bellwether and the sheer influence of the world's largest consumer. Ambition is clear. Beijing wants us to use higher pricing in the commodity markets it dominates, especially when the country imports this ingredient. He doesn't want to be just a price divider anymore. China also wants to strengthen the use of the yuan in transactions overseas, part of its nebulizer, long-term strategy to increase the profile and influence of the currency. At the same time, the government wants domestic companies to do more to combat volatility. Allowing foreigners to trade in oil and iron ore - along with rubber, low-sulphur heating oil and purified terephthalic acid or PTA, a petrochemical derivative - goes some way toward all this. Copper promises to be an even bigger step forward. The metal is a key indicator of an economy that has recovered faster than the rest of the world in the coronavirus. Although there is an existing contract on the Shanghai Futures Exchange, intended for local traders, the new, traded subsidiary of INE, is open to foreigners. The contract size is the same, but it excludes tax and customs and is shipped to customs warehouses, helping it to actively compete with the London Metal Exchange. Benchmarks are difficult to create, as the oil market shows. Initiatives to shift the established U.S. dollar contracts, such as the Urals crude to the St. Petersburg exchange, have swayed. Shanghai's yuan-based contract is the country's first, and perhaps most dramatic, endeavor in international futures markets. Although it performs relatively well, it has not become an indispensable benchmark or has caught up with the volumes of Brent and West Texas Intermediate, not to mention open interest, the number of outstanding futures contracts. The worrying spread that opened up in the spring, suggesting a distorted market, has now been rebalanced. Iron ore did better. Here, China opened its existing contract on the Dalian Commodity Exchange, which was already one of the country's most liquid derivatives. While China makes up about 14% of the world's oil consumption, it is the largest steel producer. Last year, Dalian traded more than 30 times in maritime volume. As significant, several producers, including mining giant BHP Group, agree to make payments in yuan. Copper timing is good. According to BMO Capital Markets, China currently accounts for more than half of the world's consumption, up from 39% in 2010 and 12% in 2000. The country this year alone - it has taken in more unwrought copper and has already increased its purchases of refined metal by more than 1 million tonnes compared to 2019. This indicates that when broker BANDS Financial Ltd. had a presentation on a new contract alongside the Shanghai Futures Exchange, it was viewed 15,000 times the following morning. There is always a risk of unexpected government intervention, as we have seen in the past. From China's perspective, copper won't solve the problem of the yuan becoming international either. You may need to add bins to compete effectively with the LME. It may be useful, although it is not essential. Still, creating a credible regional benchmark is the alchemy of timing, structure and luck. Maybe it's all three. Ge has been one of the blue chip stocks on the U.S. market for more than a century and was one of the original Dow Jones Industrial Average components. But the difficult energy environment coupled with some questionable accounting, ill-timed investments and poor balance sheet management has created a perfect storm for GE investors in recent years. In early 2016, GE shares were trading around $30. They finished around $33 in mid-2016 and were mostly trading above the $28 level until mid-2017. Then the bottom fell out. From that point on, the stock plummeted incessantly over the next 18 months as profits evaporated, growth threatened and the company cut its dividend and reported significant write-downs related to its doubtful previous accounting practices. The stock eventually bounced back to the $6.66 level at the end of 2018 on optimism that the worst of GE's struggles will end up in the past. (Bloomberg) -- Tencent Holdings Ltd. plunged after a world-beating surge in its stock pushed its market value to a peak of $1 trillion for the first time. The Chinese internet behemoth lost as much as 6.7% in Hong Kong on Tuesday, putting its market capitalisation below $900 billion. Traders made a profit after Monday's 11% rise, tencent's biggest rise in nearly a decade. Adding cautiously were comments made by an adviser to china's central bank in local media, indicating that excessive liquidity and extremely low costs were creating bubbles in the stock market. Read more: China China Warning threatens Stock Frenzy Hong KongThe prospect that China will tighten financing conditions threatens to derail Tencent's stock rally, which has been bolstered by the relentless flow of capital from the mainland. Onshore funds bought record amounts of Hong Kong shares this month, about a quarter of that targeting Tencent. Since more than a billion people use the WeChat social media platform, Tencent is ubiquitous with Chinese investors who do not have access to Hong Kong shares of rival Alibaba Group Holding Ltd. through its stock market ties. Tencent was the latest mega-cap company to benefit from investor enthusiasm in the tech sector, a looming milestone in the euphoria sweeping stocks worldwide. Before Tuesday, the stock had added $251 billion in January - by far the largest shareholder wealth creation worldwide. Warnings are rising that easy monetary policy will fuel bubbles in global equities, particularly in the US, where gains have led to Nasdaq.As investors looking for cheaper alternatives, they've been piling on Hong Kong shares. This has helped make the Hang Seng China Enterprises Index the best performing among the world's major benchmarks over the past month. While Tencent has long been an investor favorite in Asia, returning more than 100,000% since its 2004 initial public offering as of Monday, there are other risks to the rally. In 2018, a government crackdown on China's online gambling industry squeezed Tencent's most profitable business, which at the time made up about 40% of its revenue. Coupled with a slowing Chinese economy and a weakening yuan, Beijing's nine-month halt to approvals for new games contributed to a 22% drop in shares. The campaign against monopolistic practices has been targeting a number of industries including Tencent and rival Alibaba since late last year, including the online payments industry. But while rising regulatory risk has left Alibaba's shares about 18% lower than its October peak, Tencent has closed seven new records in the past eight sessions. One factor in the discrepancy is that Alibaba's Hong Kong stock is not included in trading relationships with onshore exchanges. Tencent would be the second Chinese company to join the trillion-dollar club after PetroChina Co., which was briefly worth more than late 2007 before it collapsed in value. U.S. tech giants Apple Inc., Amazon.com Inc., Alphabet Inc. and Microsoft Corp. are worth more than $1 trillion each, as Saudi Arabia's Oil Co.Tencent was founded in 1998 by four college classmates and a friend in Shenzhen who developed a Chinese version of the instant messaging service ICQ. Led by Pony Ma Huateng -- now the Chinese of the horse -- the company's chat software has become the primary communication tool for a generation of young Chinese.Still, Tencent surge surpassed all but most analysts' forecasts. We've all heard that the early bird catches the worm. Well, what if the early investor got the credit? Some companies prefer to do a job and do it well approach. However, this is not the Sorrento Therapeutics (SRNE) way. While laser-centric only one goal can have the benefits, having a broader based task can be just as effective when done well. That's certainly the view of Alliance Global analyst James Molloy when assessing Sorrento's prospects. SRNE combines one of the most active and promising pipelines in COVID space with a potentially transformative non-opioid pain pipeline and adds a deep oncology pipeline, the analyst said. Most SRNE pipelines are major catalysts over the next 1-4 quarters, with several late-stage clinical data readings and more potential emergency use permit (EUA) launches as well. So, what does the Sorrento menu offer in the near future? The company has already submitted the EUA for COVI-STIX, a 15-minute nasal swab antigen test for SARS-CoV-2 in the United States and Mexico, and the test can be started as early as 1H21. Accurate COVID testing is still needed in the U.S. and around the world, and Molloy expects the study to gain EUA approval and quickly approach $500 million in sales as soon as 2022. SRNE's 8-minute SARS-CoV-2 antibody test, COVID-TRACK, can quickly follow in its footsteps and the EUA is expected to submit it in the first half of the year. This could easily be another $500million+ short-term option, Molloy said. Furthermore, the company's treatment of two neutralizing antibodies, and COVI-AMG will be eligible to compete against SARS-CoV-2 in 2022. All of these, as well, have the potential to make more than $500 million according to sales Analyst The company's non-opioid pain pipeline also has several late-stage catalysts. Accelerated by the FDA, Phase 3 data on isan pain labeled SP-102 should be available this year, while RTX osteoarthritis (OA) knee pain and untreatable cancer pain kick-off Phase 2 and Phase 3 studies, respectively, in 2021. Both are aimed at significant market opportunities. Last but not least, Abivertinib, the company's leading candidate in oncology, which is indicated for etiquette for non-small cell lung cancer (NSCLC) and B-cell lymphomas, and is currently 3rd in the world. To this end, molloy sees significant gains in the future of SRNE on the basis of the progress of the company's pipeline. The analyst prices of the stock at Buy and the $35 price target mean a hefty 277% upside. (To watch Molloy's past, click here) Overall, Sormeto currently has few but very positive analysts tracking its progress. The Buy rating is only - 3, in total - the stock has a Strong Buy consensus rating. Growing concerns about stock bubbles on Wall Street sparked fears of a pullback, highlighted by a wild ride in shares like GameStop Corp. A flood of money supply, ultra-low or zero interest rates and covid-19 vaccine rollouts sparked the all-buy rally, helping world stocks add a whopping $33 trillion worth to their lows last March. A surge in share prices by some loss-making companies, red-hot public markets and amateur investors chasing stocks has drawn concern as the benchmark S&P 500 has risen. P 500 has gained more than 70% since March. A handful of heavily shorted stocks experienced extremely volatile trading Monday morning, leading some experts to speculate the 2021 short squeeze in trade would eventually run out of steam. In a poster child of short squeeze trading, video game retailer GameStop Corp. (NYSE: GME) traded as high as $159.18 on Monday before falling below $79. Meanwhile, Nikola Corporation (NASDAQ: NKLA) initially spiked as high as $22.55 before trading back below $20.50. BlackBerry Ltd (NYSE: BB) initially jumped to $20.83 before falling back to $17.30. Bed Bath & Beyond Inc. (NYSE: BBBY) rocketed all the way to $47.73, but then pulled back to $31.0. Explaining the action: Benzinga PreMarket Prep co-hosts Dennis Dick and Tim Quast, founder and CEO of ModernIR and Market Edge, discussed the brief squeeze trade on Monday morning's show. show. people argue with me that GameStop's basics have completely been reversed and this price is justified. And I'm trying to say that this has nothing to do with corporate fundamentals in a move like GameStop, Dick said. Related Link: GameStop's Power Surge: Will WallStreetBets or Short Sellers Come Out on Top? Citron Research editor Andrew Left has taken a lot of heat from critics since taking a short position and setting a $20 price target for GameStop earlier this month. Quast said the difficulties left and other small-time retail retailers facing timing these huge runs are that they don't have access to the same real-time information that big market makers like Citadel Securities do. In addition, pricers do not have to follow the same rules. It's something that traders often don't understand, Quast said. There is a market-making exemption for the Citadel and two Sigma and Morgan Stanleyes and Goldman Sachs around the world where you don't have to find stock as short as you and I can... They were granted sec immunity as market makers were afraid to locate the shares. They can be manufactured. That's how a stock behaves like crazy. How is it possible to gamestop up to 817% before today ... only in the last 90 days? Quast said. Short interest vs. short volume: Quast said that there are important reasons for these exceptions to the usual trading rules for marketers who are responsible for maintaining liquidity on the stock market. But traders need to understand what's really going on. Citadel will know what the buy-and-sell balance is, and when it reaches the equilibrium point, Citadel will be shortened and we will see the average return of GameStop. And the only way that you will see is to watch in short quantities, not short of interest. It's going to be three weeks outdated, and it's completely pointless as a measure of floating or fully traded shares, Quast said. Quast said these manufactured shares produced by market makers are responsible for stocks like GameStop's temporarily short interest rate well above 100%. Is that the end of it? The wild trading action on Monday comes on the same day Goldman Sachs issued a note pointing to potential bubble valuations for 39 stocks. Goldman named Crispr Therapeutics AG (NASDAQ: CRSP), Snowflake Inc (NYSE: SNOW) and Plug Power Inc (NASDAQ: PLUG) among the most overpriced stocks on the market based on projected 2022 corporate value-for-sale ratios. At about 10 a.m. on Monday, many of the heavily shorted sets associated with the latest squeeze began to reverse course, including GameStop. On Twitter, Dick speculated that short-term trade had finally pushed him upwards. It cools down fast in the last five minutes. I think we just peaked, he wrote. We just saw Peak Stupidity, and now everyone's learning the hard way. Benzinga take: The gamestop runs among retail retailers that have worked as a charm so far forced retail short sellers to cover their positions at great losses. However, the successful timing of entry and exit points in extremely volatile short squeezes can be extremely difficult, even for professional traders.
